

National White Collar Crime Center Launches Public Web Site

Site is a mix of technology and offers useful, concise information regarding high-tech and economic crime

RICHMOND, Virginia - March 8, 2000 - The National White Collar Crime Center (NW3C) today announced the debut of a public Web site. The site provides an information resource on the very latest in high-tech and economic crime.

The NW3C site features three levels of access. All visitors can view select information hosted on the site including content on NW3C initiatives, fraud reference and research pointers, case studies, and other related information. Those interested in job opportunities at the NW3C can discreetly provide professional qualifications and respond to job openings posted on the site via a secure Web server. A second level of access is available to visitors who register with the site for select e-mail bulletins. E-mail subscribers can gain access to a free newsletter, timely legislative bulletins as well as news articles on topics like Trends in Economic Crime, Fraud and the Internet and Business Fraud Prevention. The third level of access requires password entry and is reserved for NW3C member agencies.

The NW3C Web site will be updated regularly. It offers NW3C member agencies and the general public instant, on-line access to information regarding the organization's services, partnering initiatives, calendar of events, news releases, and much more.

About the National White Collar Crime Center

The National White Collar Crime Center is an innovative leader in the support and prevention of high-tech and economic crime. The NW3C partners with the public-sector to provide research, training and analytical assistance to law enforcement professionals. The NW3C's efforts help federal, state, and local agencies share information, improve existing fraud prevention programs and develop successful economic crime fighting initiatives.